Fifteenth Sunday after Pentecost

On this Sunday Our Lord reminds us, of two basic commandments: that we should love God with all our heart, all our mind, all our strength, which means with all the power we have to love, and our neighbor as ourselves.

When we hear the word “commandments” we always think of receiving orders what we should do, short of which we shall bear a disciplinary responsibility. But the word which is used has a wider implication; it means that this is what God bestowed to us, when having created us He launched us into freedom, into independence, gave us power to choose and gave us power to follow our vocation or to turn away from it. And so this is not an order which we receive from God; it is, as it were, the last words or a Will, in the sense in which a person who dies leaves a Will behind for his heirs to follow.

The second commandment of Christ, the second word of life He offers us is this, “If you want to learn how to love God, however incipiently, learn to love your neighbor” Often when we hear these words we say: But how? We immediately in our arrogance think of loving our neighbor with great generosity, heroically, sacrificially; what He says to us is, “Love your neighbor as you love yourself”. What does it mean?

It means first of all, on the simplest material level, that however much you possess, however much you can enjoy of life - make sure that at least one person receives from you as much as you are taking from life. That may lead us so far, so far, because we do not do any such thing. If we thought of the way in which we take, and take, and claim and claim again, and thought “All right! Every claim of mine is a claim of my neighbor; everything I take is to be given in the same measure to my neighbor”, at least one person! - How generous life would be! And if we learn to do this, then we might well learn how to love God.

Today’s Gospel reading gives us an indication of it. What prevents me - and each of us - from loving our neighbor, from loving even the dearest of our neighbors wholeheartedly, generously, is our concentration on our own selves. There is no other way of learning to love anyone than letting go of self. Look and see! Detach yourself from your own self; then you will be able to see others as they are, to see their need, to see their hunger, their joys, their misery - and you will be able to give.
